Hotly-debated city tax wins OK in El Cerrito

Is it 'taxation without representation?'

By GORDON RADDUE

L CERRITO — Murmurings from the audience of "taxation without representation" notwithstanding, the City Council Monday night put a municipal ser- tax levy into law by a 3-1 vote.

ouncilman Howard Abelson cast the lone dissenting councilwoman Margaret Collins being an excused ee after having made it clear that she was opposed to dinance when it received its first reading two weeks

Mayor Jean Siri, who in her earlier State of the City ge expressed the view that the tax was necessary for the city to achieve fiscal integrity, was joined by council members James Allen, Jr., and Richard Spellmann in support of the ordinance.

The amount of the assessment is yet to be determined, but steps in that direction will be taken at the Jan. 31 council meeting, when a mid-year financial review and budget study session is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

That passage of the ordinance was a foregone conclusion was evident in the smaller turnout for Monday's second and final reading than for the first one, but strong statements were made both for and against the levy, mostly

ac Tel claims poverty

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

LBANY — Pacific Telephone has been installing unsightly plastic wrappers over aging phone cables along streets in the Bay Area because it is too poor to them, a phone company representative told Albany Monday.

Ralph Davis, the company's outside maintenance er for the area, said the covering is a necessary orary fix" to guard the cables from wind, rain and ng squirrels.

"It sounds funny; the phone company's (supposed to oaded. But we don't have the money to pull it all not right now," Davis said. He added that the com- lans to replace the cables with smaller, plastic-coated n the future, but replacement would depend on the outcome of rate cases; it might begin by mid-1984, but he could give no guarantee.

In the meantime, the covers are necessary to minimize service troubles, Davis said. Since the installation program began last September, he said, Albany's outage rate has fallen from an average of 10 per 100 phone stations to five per 100.

Davis was one of three Pacific Telephone representatives who attended Albany's City Council meeting Monday night to respond to concerns about the cable covering and also about the placement of large cabinet-like installments on city sidewalks.

After an hour and a half of discussion on the matter, the council passed a resolution designed to ease complaints that the phone company has proceeded with its projects without due attention to those affected.

The resolution asks city staff to adopt guidelines for next step, City Manager Ron n said, is the difficult one of ng funding for the project.

Senior housing: E.C. is going to try it again

"As far as funding is concerned," d, "the only game in town seems to be (federal) Section 202 money, which isn't always available. We also have to work through a non-profit organization to develop the project.

"The best thing would be to find a non-profit organization with a successful track record for putting housing projects together," he added.

The first attempt at such a project met ultimate failure because of vigorous neighborhood opposition to the proposed site at Pomona and Ashbury avenues.

This led to delays caused by lawsuits against the city and, finally, a loss of federal fundig for what was to have been known as the Hazel Shirley Housing Project for the elderly and disabled.

Developer proposes $13.8 million Albany marina

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

LBANY — A long-contemplated dream seemed to move one step closer to reality last week as Albany's Waterfront Committee considered a proposal for a orth marina and commercial complex on a spur of city rty jutting out into San Francisco Bay.

Howard Cohen, a Tiburon-based real estate developer management consultant, outlined "a fairly big scheme" would require an estimated $13.8 million invest-

He called the Albany waterfront "the premier site in y area" for a new marina, and expressed confidence could be a commercial success even as Richmond her cities open competing boating centers in the Cohen's choice as mastermind of the project, Anthony of the planning and architectural firm Thompson right, suggested construction could begin as early as year should the city adopt the proposal.

Waterfront called 'prime site' in Bay Area

Wright said the city and developers would face some "battles" with government agencies during the permit procedure, but that all the necessary permits could be assembled in a year's time.

Waterfront Committee members seemed intrigued by the proposal as they gazed at preliminary design drawings to transform the site now occupied by the Albany Landfill, but are making no immediate decisions on the matter.

However, the committee did pass a resolution addressing the question of how the city might pay for streets, sewers and other amenities which waterfront development will require. The motion advises the City Council to ask voters to allow the city to issue revenue bonds, which the existing City Charter does not permit.

The committee also decided to invite a second interested developer, Gerald Barney of Orinda, to give a presentation as a basis for comparison.

Later, the committee will recommend a specific scheme to the City Council, which must advertise before formal selection of a waterfront developer. The council laid out procedures for choosing a developer in an ordinance passed in 1979. It must invite proposals by advertising in the western edition of the Wall Street Journal, local daily newspapers and trade journals. It could choose a developer as early as two weeks after advertising.

Albany's hopes of waterfront development have been on hold for years, due mainly to breach-of-contract lawsuits by the landfill operator which prevented the city from closing the dump. However, the city expects the problems can be solved and the landfill shut this year.

Cohen's proposal, while based on a master plan for the waterfront prepared by the planning and engineering firm Environ in 1976, would entail some changes and additions to that plan.

But the committee seemed willing to consider adaptations. Chairman Bruce Arnold, an architect himself, asked fellow members to consider the Environ plan as a general concept but to be open-minded about modifications. "As a group, I think we should be careful not to look at the Environ plan as the gospel of what should be done to the waterfront," he said.

However, Environ's basic vision of a mix of public access and commercial development on the spur of fill jutting out into the bay is reflected in Cohen's proposal.

Any waterfront development would be built with a combination of public and private investment. Putting together the financial package "is going to be the trick of this thing," Albany Administrative Officer William Haden told the committee.

Cohen said he is eager to proceed with the project

When private fences meet public property

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

ALBANY — The City Council tussled for another hour recently with the questions of when, where, why and how private fences may encroach on public property, and finally agreed on a set of guidelines for what seems to be a growing phenomenon.

The council considered the matter of encroachment permits at the suggestion of Public Works Director Robert Guletz. Applications for fences separating yards from public sidewalks have swelled in the past two years, with the last few cases provoking lengthy discussions during council sessions.

In the past, the criteria for evaluating applications were pedestrian safety, driver visibility and appearance.

Council members Monday added a list of legitimate reasons a homeowner may have for erecting a fence — but decided that no reason is needed if the fence is set back two feet from the sidewalk and meets design specifications.

Justifications for a fence with less than a two-foot setback would include proximity to school grounds or commercial districts, with resultant loitering and trespassing problems, or having a corner lot which pedestrians cut across.

However, the desire to keep dogs in or out of one's yard is not an acceptable reason, a majority of the council agreed — over the objection of council member Edward McManus, who said he saw little difference between placing obstacles in the path of kids and building barriers to discourage canines.

The council decided that, for the sake of aesthetics, fences should be more than 50 percent open, wood or other natural materials are preferred to metal and fences should fit into the overall appearance of the neighborhood. In addition, top rails must be solid or pickets rounded to eliminate safety hazards.

City ordinance already limits such fences to three feet in height.

The guidelines essentially conformed to actions the council has taken on recent encroachment permit applications.

In November 1981, for instance, the council said a Peralta Avenue resident whose house is adjacent to the Seven-Eleven store on Solano Avenue could install a fence to discourage loitering teenagers.

In June last year, council granted a Key Route Boulevard resident permission for a fence six inches back from the sidewalk to protect a garden from Albany High School students' tromping through and littering.

Last September, it approved an application from a Santa Fe Avenue resident for a fence one foot behind the sidewalk to discourage people from short-cutting across her corner lot.

But in November, the council denied Lucille Washington of Key Route Boulevard permission for a fence to keep her own dogs in her yard and other dogs out.

Washington pleaded her case again last week, saying she was fed up with dog-walkers curbing their pets on her lawn. However, McManus remained the only council member favoring her request.

In other action Monday, the City Council:

- Heard a report from Administrative Officer William Haden on last year's audit of city finances, conducted by Boyle, Cowan and Co. of Oakland for the fiscal year ending June 30. The auditors listed several concerns in a letter to the council, including too much concentration of financial duties in the hands of too few individuals, some problems with accounting technicalities, and insufficient controls on sales of city property. Haden described the problems as "minor" and said basically they have been corrected. He said the city is unable to segregate financial duties due to staff cutbacks, a situation the auditors understand.
- Approved a request from Fire Chief Horace "Mike" Koepke to assign Capt. Frank Westphal to the temporary post of acting assistant chief. The assistant chief post is vacant at present, but the 90-day appointment was incorporated into this year's budget to enable the department to accomplish its annual fire inspection work.
- Approved revisions in the city sign ordinance designed to clarify existing regulations and tighten up controls over illegal signs. The changes had been recommended by the city Planning and Zoning Commission.
- Commended Andy Anderson for his three years of work as city coordinator of the Senior Minor Home Repair Program since 1978. Due to reorganization of the county-funded program, the city will no longer have its own coordinator.
- Received a letter from Albany realtor Jerome Blank objecting to Pacific Telephone Co. installation of heavy black insulation on overhead phone cables without notice to local property-owners. Other citizens have complained about the appearance of telephone wiring cabinets in several parking strip areas.

Big marina proposed for Albany soon because of favorable financial conditions. "We see a window at the moment where interest rates are relatively low and may decline slightly," he explained.

Under Cohen's plan, the private financing would take the form of a "limited partnership" — a setup which encourages wealthy individuals to invest in return for tax breaks. Cohen would be the "general partner" responsible for managing the project.

Investors could be expected to contribute $3-4 million and additional private funds would come from an institutional lender, Cohen said.

Revenue to the city would be generated by some sort of lease agreement as well as sales, business and other taxes on the commercial parts of the project.

Haden said the city has to cover "non-developer costs" for sewer lines, street lights and the like. Money for park area, nature trails, a public boat launch and other aspects of the project might come from federal and state agencies.

But the major and most immediate public expense will be closing the landfill. Haden predicted closure will cost $2-3 million, but said up to $1.4 million might be available for this purpose from the California Coastal Conservancy.

Revenue bonds would be the city's best bet for carrying its share, according to Haden. Although a charter change proposal to allow revenue bonds was defeated at the polls last year, he speculated that voters might be willing to approve such a change knowing it would spur waterfront development.

Cohen said his proposal is based on the closure plan which the city is working out with the Water Quality Control Board and other state agencies.

The 500-berth marina on the south side of the landfill spur would be sheltered by breakwaters. Offices, a club, perhaps a "boatel" with 50 rooms for seafar[illegible] other marine-related businesses would be housed [illegible] ings stepped up a slope overlooking the marina.

Wright said an innovative building configura[illegible] possible because the fill rises 30 feet above the leve[illegible] bay. But the slope also poses problems for parki[illegible] added, so parking lots would have to be behind the [illegible] ings.

He predicted that a major permit problem w[illegible] getting Bay Conservation and Development Com[illegible] approval to install rubble breakwaters on the west [illegible] the marina, meaning more fill in the bay.

But the commission might be placated by a [illegible] removal of an existing rubble breakwater enclosing [illegible] on the western side of the landfill. That structure [illegible] essary and is breaking up anyway, Wright said.

Another planned breakwater to the east wou[illegible] floating assembly of concrete boxes. It would pos[illegible] problems and would having the added advantage [illegible] moveable, Wright said.

The rubble breakwater would have public acc[illegible] probably prove a good fishing spot, Cohen obser[illegible] plan also includes a fishing pier on the west side of [illegible] spur and a public boat launch at the northwest co[illegible]

Asked if a marina with fewer than 500 spots w[illegible] feasible, Cohen replied: "Any reduction in the nu[illegible] berths does damage the economic viability of the [illegible] Any increase improves it."

Cohen said demand for marina space on the b[illegible] exceeds supply, but in the future Albany "will hav[illegible] commercially to attract tenants."

Richmond, for instance, is developing a ma[illegible] 1,500 berths. But Wright, who worked on that [illegible] predicted it won't be completed for another 10 ye[illegible] against.

The shortest, most succinct opposing argument was registered by Roger Henderson, who confined his remarks to the rhetorical question, "What right do you (the council) have to overrule the vote of the people?"

He was referring to the fact that the tax override was defeated by about a 6 percent margin when put to the voters last November.

"Do the people of El Cerrito control this council or does the council control the people of El Cerrito?" George Martin angrily asked, and Ron Nielsen leveled the "taxation without representation" charge, saying the council should "put it on the ballot and let the people decide what they can do without and what they need."

Milton Wolff and his wife, Freida, both stood up in favor of the tax, Wolff calling it "the best bargain my family can have to maintain the kind of services this city has provided."

Freida Wolff agreed with her husband that many people are in "blind opposition to the word tax," adding:

"This thing was not turned down overwhelmingly (by the voters). We have a lovely city, a beautiful city that offers more services that any city my husband and I have ever lived in."

Abelson contended that the city budget is not down to a "bare bones" level, as Siri, Allen and Spellmann have insisted was the case.

"The people in El Cerrito want to spend money for the services they want," he said, accusing his colleagues of "telling the people 'you didn't really know what y[illegible] doing when you went to the polls.'"

Allen, noting that the council did not get inv[illegible] the election but rather left the campaigning up to [illegible] group, said the fact that 10 percent of the voters [illegible] sure E blank on their ballots indicated a considera[illegible] of understanding of the issues involved.

City Manager Ronald Creagh stated after the [illegible] the tax that information from the League of C[illegible] Cities indicates that the city could lose 45 perc[illegible] remaining state subventions, which were cut by [illegible] this fiscal year.

"There's real confusion as to what will happ[illegible] said. "It's a matter of which rumor you want to [illegible] may not know until one minute to midnight."

In her State of the City message, Siri depl[illegible] budget cuts the council already has had to make [illegible] them six full-time positions, a number of needed p[illegible] positions, elimination of the annual tree-trimm[illegible] gram, shutting off all mid-block street lights and [illegible] the Tree Commission to a voluntary arbitration p[illegible]

She stated that the city already is dipping into [illegible] cial reserves.

Creagh noted that the final 1982-82 budge[illegible] many respects a contingency budget because of u[illegible] ties concerning potential actions of the state legi[illegible]

He urged the people of El Cerrito to attend [illegible] coming budget sessions and provide their input.

"Ours are open to the public," he said. "[illegible] budget sessions are not."

placement of the street boxes which require the company to submit accurate three-dimensional drawings and to notify adjoining property owners. The guidelines are to lay out a procedure for dealing with citizens' objections to the plans.

The resolution also instructs staff to ask the phone company to provide a schedule for future cable replacement before continuing to install temporary covering. It also asks staff to explore ways that Albany might get to the top of the list of communities slated for new cables.

The phone company cables and cabinets were brought to the attention of the City Council by local realtor Jerome Blank. He told council members Monday he had [illegible] tonished to find black plastic weatherguarding [illegible] on cables in front of a house he owned along Adm[illegible] and even more dismayed to discover it was happ[illegible] over town.

Saying the covering was "marring the beauty [illegible] which had worked hard to eliminate cable clutte[illegible] main streets, Blank criticized the phone company [illegible] ahead without consulting the city or its citizens.

He also complained that one of the cabinet[illegible] peared by his church without warning several mo[illegible] "What I object to is they didn't even go to the [illegible] the property, the church, and say we have to pu[illegible] he said.

Davis said some seven million feet of cab[illegible] from the 1920s-30s are affected by the weatherg[illegible] gram begun last fall. He said 33,500 feet of ca[illegible] been covered in Albany and plans call for coverin[illegible] 11,275 feet.

When asked by Blank if Kensington and [illegible] were in the program also, Davis replied, "Yes, I'm [illegible] those meetings too."

Davis said the covering is supposed to last [illegible] meaning the cables should be replaced within th[illegible]

He seemed apologetic about the program, [illegible] that Pacific Telephone suddenly finds itself in a [illegible] bind after years of being subsidized by Ameri[illegible] phone and Telegraph. A federal court decision [illegible] AT&T to give up its regional phone companies to [illegible] competition in the telecommunications field.

Pacific Telephone recently applied for a rate [illegible] that would double residential rates, and Davis [illegible] that modernization of the cable system is riding [illegible] the outcome of that case.

Addressing the installation of the street cab[illegible] cific Telephone public works coordinator George [illegible] told the council the boxes connect cables to a[illegible] ground "feeder system" and are necessary to accom[illegible] increased demand for phone services.

He said the company can be "flexible" about [illegible] locate a box, but acknowledged that, "Occasion[illegible] perception of the suitable location differs quite a [illegible] the individual working or living around that locati[illegible]

The fact that boxes have appeared without [illegible] tion with neighbors drew sharp words from city [illegible] trative Officer William Haden. If the phone com[illegible] to stick a box by someone's house, the compan[illegible] consult the "stuckee," Haden said, "and at le[illegible] where he doesn't have to mow around it every we[illegible] it where it doesn't kill his wife's rhododendron."

Haden also observed that the company's a[illegible] for encroachment permits for the cabinets were [illegible] with two-dimensional drawings and contained no [illegible] that the installations would rise above the ground.

"This was a breakdown in communications," [illegible] said.

Mayor Ruth Ganong noted that some of the [illegible] are not in ideal positions with regard to traffic; [illegible] she passes every day have been knocked over seve[illegible] by cars, she said.

The prevailing view, however, was that San Pablo might not meet federal Housing and Urban Development funding standards for such a project, which tended to discourage building along heavily-trafficked streets because of noise, pollution and safety factors.

Wolfe, who said she has "lots of projects," is doing a documentary on teenage preganancy for the Oakland public schools. She's also working on a local guide to childbirth options and is editing a slide show on children and nuclear war. When necessary, she takes typing and photography jobs.

The two women came together through the East Bay Media Center (formerly known as Grassroots Video), which they call "the mother of the show."

Davidson, a former teacher from Chicago, had become interested in gerontology, and become an intern at the Sage program, a health and exercise program for older adults. There she did a videotape on an elderly Jewish woman.

"When I got to know her, I just wanted to preserve her," Davidson recalled. "I couldn't afford to make a film, so I did a tape."

Davidson admitted that she didn't know very much about the process, but was sufficiently intrigued by her subject to learn. She showed her tape at a video fair sponsored by Grassroots Video, and became a volunteer with the organization.

"The advantage of starting as a volunteer is that you never know where you can end up," she said cheerfully. "People without training and skill can learn new things; they can dabble and change the course of their lives."

Wolfe came to East Bay Media Center through an equally circuitous route. Trained as an anthropologist, Wolfe returned to her native Bay Area after five years in New York, where she had produced a documentary on the natural childbirth movement and one on the Hare Kirshnas.

"I thought it would be easy to find work here," Wolfe said, "but it's really hard to break in. Then I met someone in a bike store who told me about Grassroots Video, and that's where I meant Deanne."

Wolfe, who's studied urban anthropology and written a guide to childbirth options in New York, sees many advantages to working in public access television.

"We control this program," said Wolfe, who doubles as director (Davidson is host). "It's always possible to be a production assistant or typist at someplace like Channel 2, and work on someone else's ideas. Here there's a chance to do a lot of growth on my own."

"We have an opportunity to educate ourselves and learn things we might not have any other way," Davidson agreed. "We have to ask ourselves a lot of questions before we can write a script, and then we must take what we learned and make it accessible to a lay audience."

"You know, I'm not a great promoter of volunteerism," she went on, "but really this is a wonderful way to learn so much."

Wolfe said that prospective subjects never turn her down: "everyone is drawn to the power of television, and on our show everyone has a great time."

"People are charmed by our little studio (Televents in El Cerrito)," Davidson suggested. "There's nothing intimidating about it; it's cozy and friendly and this relaxes people."

Davidson thinks the particular chemistry of performers and crew contributes to the good atmosphere.

"People who wouldn't get together for any other reason come together to put out good community TV," she said.

Wolfe goes a step further. "A program like ours demystifies television. Often at the end of a show, there's spontaneous applause from the crew and talent. It's just amazing what ordinary people can do when they come together for a real purpose."

Ice cream vendor gets in his licks with EC Council

By GORDON RADDUE

L CERRITO — An Albany resident seeking to work his way through graduate studies at John F. Kennedy University in Orinda by selling ice cream on the s of El Cerrito has been given a boost by the City ncil.

The council Monday approved a staff recommendation opt an ordinance reducing the business license tax for eam vendors from $154 for three months to $150 an- or $50 quarterly.

The beneficiary of the action is Albany resident Gary ford, who had sought a reduction of the tax to a level would allow him to operate three hours per day her permitting) at a profit in El Cerrito.

Crawford, studying for master's degrees in counseling ology and comparative religion at JFK University, en doing business in Albany and Oakland when he ted the Planning Commission last October about driving his vending truck in El Cerrito.

He was referred to the business office, where he was informed the fee for three months would be $154. Amazed at the size of the figure, Crawford went for assistance to Assistant City Manager Tom Sinclair, who said he could do nothing about the fee but steered the vendor to the proper channels for an appeal.

In a written notice of appeal to the council, Crawford pointed out that the $154 fee would erase 17 percent of his net profit, which he said was 30 percent of his projected daily gross of $50 for a three-hour stint.

Crawford noted that other cities charged much less, among them Oakland ($25 a year plus a $40 police permit), Concord ($118 a year) and Albany ($118 for six months).

"I would think a yearly fee of $100 to $150 would satisfy your need to make some money, yet not prohibit my operation in your town and also protect you from a flood of vendors," he stated in his appeal.

Crawford hails from the east coast, where he says he was an ice cream vendor in New York and Connecticut for 10 of the past 15 years, including four with the Good Humor Corporation.

He was lured to California, he says, because "JFK has a unique program I could not find elsewhere."

While pleased with the school, he has been less than enchanted with the higher operating costs he found here for setting up an ice cream venture.

"For example," he said, "license plates in Connecticut cost me $38; in California the cost is $262. General repair costs on my truck also are much higher."

Crawford concedes his Oakland operation has been profitable with the modest license and permit costs, but he also has found the area dangerous.

Do-it-yourself wills are now available

eginning next month, Californians, who want to a last will and testament but do not want to pay a r to do it, will be able to buy form wills from the State California for $1.

The bar's Board of Governors voted in San Francisco 8 to publish and distribute fill-in-the-blank forms for fferent types of wills.

The forms, which are contained in a state statute that ffect Jan. 1, can be used to pass property to one's e or children, either directly or through a trust.

The State Bar decided to publish and distribute the to ensure that the public will be able to use them ately, according to Jeanne Arthur, a Palo Alto at- who heads the state bar's committee on public af- She said commercial publishers probably will even- publish the forms as well.

Arthur said 60 percent of adult Californians do not will. The bar proposed the legislation and decided to h and distribute the forms to fill that gap, Arthur "Ordinarily, they should be used only for small and e estates, according to Oakland attorney John unell, the previous president of the State Bar's estate ng, trust and probate law section.

The forms may be ordered from the State Bar by g a check or money order to Will Forms, The State California, 555 Franklin St., San Francisco. Those ted should specify whether they want a form with or t a trust. The forms also will be distributed to statio- ores and book stores, Arthur said.

The veteran search

We are trying to locate members of the old 315th Troop Carrier Group from World War II days and after a 37 year void it is a very difficult task. We have been able to locate over 700 of our former members during the past six years.

As we continue to find old orders, that are from 37 to 40 years old, we hope to be able to locate another 1000 to 1500 men who served in Africa, Europe and South America during World War II with the old 315th.

I am trying to locate Harold E. Johnson and Fred G. Taplin, who were members of the 315th Troop Carrier Group during World War II and entered the U.S. Army Air Corps from Berkeley. It is my hope that some of their relatives or old friends will see this and be able to pass along current addresses. If any former members of the old 34th, 43rd, 309th, 310th Troop Carrier Squadrons or Supporting Units should see this — please drop me a line with information on your service. Your name will be added to our mailing list and you will be sent the latest newsletter, roster and pictorial review of past reunions.

We are already planning for our fifth reunion which will be held in San Francisco in the fall of 1984. Please send any information or addresses to: Robert L. Cloer, Recording Secretary, 1417 Valley View Dr., Yuba City, CA 95591.

Reality: 'distorted and inverted'

US restraint during its nuclear monopoly and its nuclear armament freeze through the last decade have met with the USSR persistently accelerating production of such arms and increasing Soviet aggressive positioning against the weak.

This alarming scenario has produced a dominant USSR military with the Soviet Navy having 88 ballistic missile submarines (950 missles), the US Navy 47 (544 missiles); a very deteriorated US air arm dependent upon outdated, relatively slow B-52's (for possible delivery of cruise missles) and an inferior and obsolete set of land-based ICBM's. Little wonder the Soviets clamor freeze.

It would perpetuate US arms inferiority, deny velopment of a credible deterrent and invite ag from those who aim to capture the Free World American military weakness fuels Soviet surrogate Central America.

Senior editor Barron in the October Reader reports the soviets launched the Freeze Movement ing Brezhnev's Feb. '81 policy address. The initial clear freeze national strategy conference (at Geo University in Washington, D.C.)included two from Moscow.

The Soviet-controlled and -funded World Council, with which the US Peace Council is abets the effort. Unfortunately, as KGB defector chenko points out, the only disarmament the US rently seeks is that of the US. Reality is distorted verted.

Peace hinges upon US deterent capability and advanced by an end to US policiies that build US tary-industrial might. Paradoxically, a current freeze significantly increase possibilities for an attack US.

Enjoy summer fruits in winter

I miss the fresh orchard fruits of summer. Of course, our winter apples and oranges are welcome and appreciated, but I do miss peaches and plums and especially apricots.

In a past column, I tried to list my favorite fruits in sequence and, of course, I couldn't do it. But a chance finding of an old letter set me thinking and salivating about apricots.

I can't wait for my new little tree to produce, but, luckily, dried and even canned apricots are plentiful and available. Actually, I rarely make anything with fresh apricots anyway, because I love to eat them just as fruit. Dried apricots, which by themselves make wonderful sweet snacks, can be used in many great-tasting ways.

Great source of vitamin A

Six pounds of fresh apricots are needed to make one pound of dried fruit, so dried apricots are quite concentrated both in flavor and in vitamin A. Only one-half cup provides more than the daily recommended allowance for an adult. (They are included on space flight diets for this reason.)

For N.L.F. (who knows why), here is a recipe for an apricot flan that is beautiful, delicious and surprisingly easy to make. For this recipe I would choose a top grade of canned apricots because I would like them uniform and unblemished. And, of course, if you don't have a flan ring, make your shell in a pie pan or quiche pan.

Apricot Flan

Step 1: Prepare a short (high fat) pastry dough and make an unfilled shell.

Step 2: Drain 4 c. canned apricot halves and pat dry with paper towels.

Step 3: Prepare a custard. Combine in a small saucepan:

1 c. milk
1 t. vanilla

Do not boil but heat over medium heat to a simmer. In a mixing bowl, combine:

¼ c. flour
½ c. fine sugar
Add: 3 egg yolks.

Beat thoroughly. Then pour the milk slowly into the flour mixture, blending constantly with a wooden spoon. Pour all this into a double boiler and cook over hot water, stirring constantly until thick and smooth. Cool. This is a basic cooked custard that is used as a filling or coating in many pastries. It keeps the juices from seeping into the crust and making it soggy.

Step 4: Prepare a glaze with 1 c. red currant jelly and 3 T. ruby port, warmed together in a saucepan until the jelly melts. This adds sparkle to the flan and keeps the fruit from wrinkling. You could use apricot jam and water instead, but I like the color of the currant glaze.

Step 5: Prepare 1 c. whipping cream, beaten with 2 T. powdered sugar until firm. Add 1 t. apricot brandy if you wish. Some cooks like to fold in a stiffly beaten egg white to help stabilize the cream (beaten separately first, of course). It also acts as an extender.

Step 6: To assemble, fill the baked shell with the cooked custard, smoothing the top. Arrange the well-drained apricots, cut-side down, close together over the custard in concentric circles. Spoon the glaze generously over the apricots and let it fill in the empty spaces between the fruit. Chill. Ring the top with the whipped cream just before serving. If you want to get fancier, use a pastry bag and flute around the edge and garnish with slices of almonds.

Some more goodies

As long as you have a bag of dried apricots on hand, here are a few ways to use them. Try this for a new flavor Albany 94706.

over our green salad:

Apricot-Yogurt Dressing

In a blender, combine and whirl until smooth:
1 c. plain yogurt
¼ c. chopped dried apricots
Add:
3 T. oil
2 T. white wine vinegar
1 T. honey
1 t. minced onion
Pinch of dry mustard
Salt and pepper to taste
Blend all ingredients and chill.

Serving pork or chicken? Use this as an accompaniment and get raves:

Apricot Rice Pilaf

Saute in 2 to 3 T. butter:
1 c. raw rice
1 onion, chopped
1 stalk celery, chopped
Add:
½ t. ground ginger
1 c. diced dried apricots
⅓ cup raisins
2 c. chicken broth or bouillon

Cover and simmer until rice is tender. Don't peek until 10 minutes is up, then only once to determine additional cooking time needed. Toss with ½ cup salted peanuts and however much more salt you wish, if any.

I could go on for pages more with apricot recipes I have saved over the years. A few of my favorites are Barbecued Chicken Wings, Apricot Bar Cookies, and a very easy Apricot Sorbet. Send me the usual envelope and I'll be glad to share them with you.

Notes on vitamin A

There are two sides to the discussion of the value of supplementing your diet with this important vitamin. Some folks (including some doctors) take megadoses of it on general principles. New studies are now being published on its value as a possible cancer suppressor. One study shows that heavy smokers who consumed low levels of vitamin A were four times as likely to get lung cancer as those who got adequate amounts of A!

However, it has also been shown that massive doses of vitamin A are toxic and can cause side effects ranging from rashes, headaches, and insomnia to serious injury to the brain and nervous system. That's why it's very important to take supplements of vitamin A only under a physician's supervision. (This goes for other vitamins as well.)

Dr. Jean Mayer of Tufts University recommends an all-purpose vitamin supplement daily for those of us over 50 as a general aid to our now less-than-efficient systems, but that isn't a megadose in any way.

The benefits of vitamin A — healthy skin, hair and mucous membranes, good night vision, good bone and teeth growth — can be had naturally with a balanced diet that includes lots of yellow and dark green fruits and vegetables, eggs, cheese, and liver. I'd rather eat these than a pill, any day, anyway, wouldn't you?

'Sam' needs foster home

Sam, an 18-year old Vietnamese refugee, needs foster parents who can provide a home for him while he finishes high school and assist him to adjust to his new culture.

Sam (not his real name) left Vietnam last year on a boat, spent some time a Southeast Asian refugee camp and finally made his way to the United States. His family was unable to accompany him.

He is enrolled in high school and needs a family that can help him make future plans for work or college.

If you are interested in providing a home for Sam, call the Alameda County Social Service Agency at 874-5527. The board and care payment for Sam is $311 per month with an additional annual clothing allowance. Medical and dental expenses are covered by Medi-Cal.

LET'S TALK IT OVER with Odd E. Haugen

People outgrow their residences just as children outgrow clothing. As the size of the family changes, the home becomes too small for Mom, Dad and several active children or two large for just Mom and Dad after the children have moved away into homes of their own. The needs of the family change but the house stays the same size.

Some people are reluctant to sell their homes and find more suitable residences because the value has increased so much that they fear the tax consequences. The tax laws now provide that no tax need be paid if the proceeds from the sale are reinvested in a new residence within one year.

Let us explain how you can enjoy a home perfectly suited to the size and needs of your family, without paying a tax on the sale of your present home. Call or stop in so we can "Talk It Over" with you.

Ric Prindle is One Act's new artistic director

Albany resident is 20-year theater veteran

By CHARLES PELTON

LBANY — As a young child, Ric Prindle was constantly entertaining his family and friends, hamming it up with impressions and accents.

Now, after nearly 20 years working in the Bay Area as tor, director, and college instructor, Prindle is poised in a new role — as the artistic director of San Francis- One Act Theatre Company.

Starting the first of this year, the Albany resident took e reins of the 99-seat theater, which is located in the of the city's theater, hotel and shopping district.

"I think my ideas about the direction of the theater ompany coincided with the ideas which they have al- point for point," Prindle said.

"Primarily, we both believe that the One Act's materiould be a little more diverse, a little more experimen- he said.

"The One Act has focussed on what I would call rican realistic plays. I'd like to see, for example, more ish plays, more plays which use guest actors or direc- and plays which focus on the experience of men."

The company's format has traditionally been programs wo or three short plays, generally one acts, grouped und a single theme. The One Act Theatre, now in its nth year, is the only company in the country exclusi- devoted to the single act play.

"The one act is almost too strictly narrow as a format. efer the term 'short form theater' which could embrace ews and short musicals also.",

As artistic director, Prindle's mark on the company ll more acutely felt next season. All of this season's were chosen before he took the helm:

"I'm not coming in with a scythe, cutting at the ankles he company's program," he explained. "For the bal- of the season I'm interested primarily in making sure program is done with quality."

In his new position, Prindle will be directing up to one of the plays the company puts on. He also hopes to be ng in some of the productions.

"My primary goal is to work collectively with a large ber of people in an administrative capacity. However, never want to lose touch with directing and acting.

"It's a little ironic because originally in high school and in college at Amherst what I really wanted to be was llege professor," Prindle said.

"I had been acting on the side for quite some time. As ely child, I found I had a lot of time to fantasize. My nazing was quite active, doing impressions and accents various monologues. I also loved jazz, especially the rmance aspect of it.

"My first actual acting role was in high school where I yed Uncle Chris, an old Swedish, tear-jerking sort of acter, in 'I Remember Mama.' The audience's feed- was amazing, a real ego stroke.

"However, even when I was at UC-Berkeley, getting a ster's in English literature, I still thought my calling was cademia," he recalled.

"One day I was typing the footnotes for a paper on ce Morris when an epiphany occurred. How banal it all began to feel. Do I really want to be a scholar working on trivia like this?"

Prindle immediately transferred to the dramatic arts department, where he received a master's degree in 1964.

"It was at Berkeley that I began to direct," he said. "I loved the whole vision — the sound, the lighting, the way a whole production looked."

"Ric is a very competent director," said George House, an East Bay resident who both acts at the One Act and lectures at UC.

"He approaches directing with the sensitivities of an actor," House said. "As a result, you have complete confidence in him. You know you're working on a collaborative effort.

After receiving his degree, Prindle lived for two years in New York. He was newly married and flushed with all that the Big Apple offered:

"I knew, however, that it was just a vacation from California," he said. "I didn't want to be a New York actor. I saw too many actors whose spirit seemed to be shrivelling. They might be excellent, but the competition there is absolutely back breaking."

Prindle returned to the Bay Area in the fall of 1966 where, among other involvements, he began to direct in the early, formative stages of San Francisco's Magic Theater. From 1969 to 1973 he was an acting assistant professor of dramatic arts at UC-Santa Cruz:

"I was asked to help form the new department there," Prindle said. "Unfortunately, in spite of the protests of colleagues and students, I was not asked to stay. I hadn't yet completed my dissertation. That was, in the long run, a good move — Santa Cruz can be quite an insular community.

"I did finally finish the project, getting my Ph.D. in directing. The dissertation, which grew to 1,010 pages, was on the styles and conventions of Elizabethan acting. I love the topic. In fact, I'm discussing publishing it with several academic houses."

After Santa Cruz, Prindle spent two years in Portland, Oregon, as an instructor at Reed College:

"The atmosphere there was stifling. It was intense and tense. The faculty seemed consumed in power plays. They were in the mold of 1930s communists, but were artistically very conservative. At a faculty meeting, I heard theater arts compared with basketweaving."

"I'm also very interested in building the audience," Prindle says. "The artistic and business aspects of a theater go hand in hand."

In 1975 Prindle was offered a lecturing position in the dramatic arts department at Berkeley. He was back in the Bay Area for good.

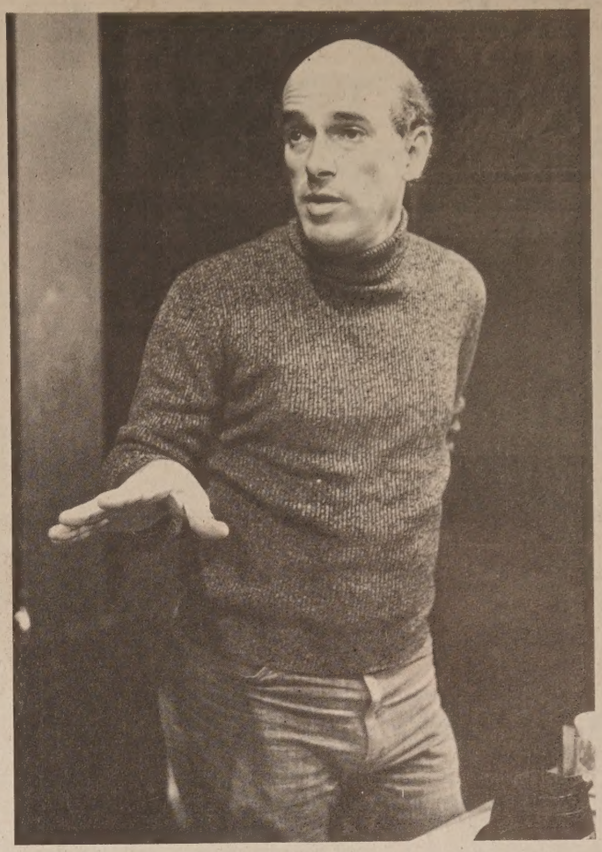
The man who turned away from academe was now firmly in its fold. However, instead of hunting down obscure facts, he has been teaching his two passions: directing and acting. Over these past seven years he has been both a freelance actor and a freelance director for all the major Bay Area companies with the exception of the Eureka Theatre. He has also been a commercial actor.

Prindle's acting is as admired as his directing. Bill Oliver, who is a professor at UC and has directed Prindle, calls him a "total" actor:

"He's done a wide range of plays," Oliver said. "As an actor he gives himself totally."

House agrees: "Prindle knows acting very thoroughly. When we were in the graduate program together he did a Hamlet which has turned out to be one of the best I've ever seen. He brought an enormous amount of love and sensuousness to the character."

Because of his acting experience, Prindle has very specific ideas about the growth of the company's actors. "I think the actors here felt they had been constantly cast according to their existing talents," he said.



Albany's Ric Prindle: "It was at Berkeley that I began to direct. I loved the whole vision — the sound, the lighting, the way a whole production looked."

"I think they want to be challenged with more diverse roles — they want to stretch artistically. I hope to be able to offer workshops for them. Part of this new stimulus could come from occasionally inviting guest artists to work with the company.

"I'm also very interested in building the audience. The artisitic and business aspects of a theater go hand in hand. I see myself as something of a partner with our general manager, Steve Sigel."

Prindle, who will stay at the university part-time, has lived in Albany for three years now. He has two sons, Gabriel, 13, and Julian, 10. The younger son has started pursuing his father's passion:

"Julian has become an avid fan of theater. He has performed several times with the Bay Area Youth Theater."

C.C. College: student fees may speed role revers

'It's a step in the wrong direction'

By JEFF BURBANK

The students and campus president at Contra Costa College find themselves in unusually solid agreement over levying fees on students next year:

It's a step in the wrong direction. People who can't afford the fees won't go to school. Enrollment will drop. And the college will move away from offering courses of interest to residents who aren't going to a four-year school.

"It seems like we're now going back to the 'junior college' concept rather than forward with the 'community college' concept," president Ray Dondero said. "We're going from practically no fees to a very big possibility of an escalation of fees. Most of us are concerned about the consequences over the long-term rather than the next two years."

No one knows how high the fees will be. The board that governs the state's junior colleges is reviewing proposals that range from a couple of dollars per unit to a high of a $90 flat fee per semester.

The board recently declared that the one-year "emergency" fee will start in the fall of 1983.

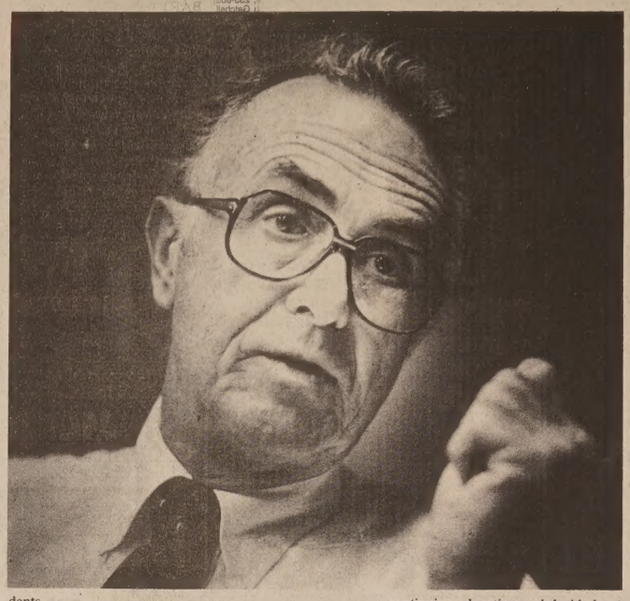
Students, interviewed at random, were worried about juggling work and school.

"Some students will have to work because they're too poor to play fees," says Collette Bennett, 19, a business sophomore. "A lot can't pay for (fees), books, and support themselves and their kids at the same time."

"I'd think about getting a job, or try to find a place that offered courses for free or something," says Terry Gates, 26, a college graduate who is considering enrolling in a class or two next fall.

President Dondero says the levy could bring about a change in coming years in the demographics of the student body at the college.

"There's a real possibility for a change in the ethnicity of the college," says Dondero, implying that fees would hit harder at enrollment of blacks, Hispanics and Asian students.



Contra Costa College president Ray Dondero: "There's a real possibility for a change in the ethnicity of the college"

The changes "may not be significant next year," he said, but will be all too noticeable in the future.

Already during the past year, Contra Costa College has cut at least 50 courses, from badminton to real estate, which lost 12 classes.

"The state thought the courses were in the realm of continuing education and decided not to fund them," says Dondero.

An enrollment loss of 500 students followed the class cuts in the fall of 1982, dropping the student tally from 9,000 the year before and costing the college $180,000 in enrollment-based state funds.

Harry Buttimer, chancellor of the three-campus Contra Costa Community College District, says the fees charged to students will continue to put the co kind of double jeopardy.

"Enrollment will probably go down with duction of fees and the state aid will go down it," he says. "The consequences that are felt by pend on the severity of the enrollment drop."

The net effect at Contra Costa College, says Dondero, "is that we must sustain the same level we have this year, and to be successful we're goin to make-up for those losses. We're really at a di now because it's difficult to raise enrollments."

Dondero, president of Contra Costa Colleg years during the tumultuous 1960's, was wrested tirement and persuaded to accept the prsidency when course cuts came. Since he took over, colleagues have commented about the drift of the nity college" concept.

The idea, Dondero said, meant the college particular educational needs of the community located, offering the approriate academic or courses based on the demand of the specific regi colleges, part of a movement that started early tury, provide basic "bread and butter" course mostly to transfer to a four-year school.

The trend now, he said, may be toward fewer courses unique to the individual college in more universal, basic selection of courses comm the colleges in the state.

The charging of fees for classes at Contra C lege and other schools in the 70 community colleg statewide came as a response to one of the most times in the history of state-supported education islature considers a multibillion-dollar state budg projected for next year.

"The state problem is our problem," said C Buttimer.

And it's the students' problem.

"You would have to make money to go said Tom Purvis, 18, a full-time real estate major. a way to pay it, but I'd take fewer courses too, need the units (to transfer)."

Andrew Furlow, a full-time appliance repai and part-time worker, put it this way: "If I didn't refund coming, I'd be stuck."

El Cerrito closes part of Potrero Ave.

EL CERRITO — The area of Potrero Avenue between Kearney Street and Lexington Avenue is closed until Jan. 21 for the removal of Santa Fe Railroad tracks.

The city is posting detour signs to divert traffic to other streets while the contractor completes work on the intersection. Potrero is the last of 14 intersections under the BART right-of-way involved in the project.

City traffic engineer James Loopstra said no-parking signs will be placed on one side of Lexington and Kearney to facilite the rerouting of traffic.

By Oswald Jacoby and James Jacoby

The unlucky expert won the first trick with the 10 of hearts after dummy played low. He thought a while and led back a club. West took the trick with his ace and led a club right back.

Now South ran off the rest of the tricks to make five odd.

In the subsequent heated argument between the unlucky expert and West the U.E. pointed out that if West had just led a second heart the U.E. would win, lead a third heart and establish a trump trick for West's doubleton queen-10.

West wanted to know why the U.E. couldn't have simply played the ace and king of hearts at tricks two and three and established that same trump trick?

It would have done that, but the club trick would disappear. South would ruff with his ace, lead a trump to dummy's king and discard his club on the queen of hearts. If East led a low heart South would just discard his club right then and there.

The U.E. had missed a false-card play that would have insured the set as long as West held a second heart.

He should win the first trick with the jack of hearts to deny possession of the 10. West would then be sure that South still held that heart 10 and would lead a second heart to insure defeat of the contract.

CC County hopes to avoid staff layoffs

By DON McCORMACK

Contra Costa County should be able to scrimp its way out of its budget crunch but it will emerge so poor that it may be unable to avoid layoffs this summer.

County Adminstrator Mel Wingett made this good news-bad news prediction Monday at a meeting of the Board of Supervisors' finance committee. The county government, with about 5,000 workers, is one of Contra Costa's major employers.

Last July, supervisors passed a $277 million budget, down about $4 million from the previous fiscal year. In December, county officials, who all along said they were guessing at income, admitted they guessed wrong. Spending, if unchecked, would outrun income this fiscal year by $8.8 million, they said.

Supervisors told Wingett to cut programs or find more money. Wingett was able to shift $3 million from overfunded insurance and worker's compensation programs and defer $525,000 in storm repairs. The sale of county property is expected to bring another $200,000. County department heads, told to squeeze their budgets, came up with $4.2 million.

Wingett is asking supervisors to dip into reserves for $849,000 to eliminate the remaining deficit. He will also give supervisors a gloomy view of next year's budget. Coming into this fiscal year, the county enjoyed a reserve of $7 million. This will be stripped to less than $2 million by summer, Wingett said.

Other expenses are expected to rise sharply. Henry Clarke, general manager of the County Employees Association Local 1, said he will ask for a wage increase equal at least to the cost-of-living adjustment, about 5 percent. Each 1 percent pay raise for employees costs the county $1.2 million, Wingett said.

At the same time, income is expected to continue its decline. Gov. George Deukmejian, to balance his budget, is cutting the state contribution to local governments, a loss to Contra Costa of about $1.2 million.

If interest rates stay down or decline further, the county's return on investments will drop about $7 million, Wingett said.

One of the ironies of the county's plight is that it was balancing its books partially by investing in high-yield government loans. These loans paid high interest because inflation was high. Meanwhile, inflation and the attempts to bring it under control helped slow business activity — reducing the amount that could be raised in taxes.

Inflation and interest rates have sharply declined, but business is still stagnant.

Wingett said that county expenses will rise $15 million or $20 million — and county income only $5 million.

He is advising the board to start early on next year's budget so layoffs, should they be necessary, can be made in June.

LET'S TALK IT OVER with Odd E. Haugen
People outgrow their residences just as children outgrow clothing. As the size of the family changes, the home becomes too small for Mom, Dad and several active children or two large for just Mom and Dad after the children have moved away into homes of their own. The needs of the family change but the house stays the same size.
Some people are reluctant to sell their homes and find more suitable residences because the value has increased so much that they fear the tax consequences. The tax laws now provide that no tax need be paid if the proceeds from the sale are reinvested in a new residence within one year.
Let us explain how you can enjoy a home perfectly suited to the size and needs of your family, without paying a tax on the sale of your present home. Call or stop in so we can "Talk It Over" with you.

E.C., S.F. police arrest eight in raid

EL CERRITO — Eight people were arrested on charges varying from drug-related offenses to possession of stolen property and illegal firearms Friday in a 6 a.m. raid by local and San Francisco police on a home at 2033 Carquinez Ave.

El Cerrito Police Lt. Lee Blevins said the raid culminated an investigation launched by state parole authorities and the San Francisco police, adding that several items reported stolen in local burglaries were recovered.

Taken into custody were Albert Carl Fernandez, 36, James Kunkel, 44, and Paul Richard Kunkel, 22, all of the Carquinez address; Willis B. Curlee, Jr., 29, of 2633 Braga Lane, San Pablo; John J. Connell, 39, of Antioch; Barbara Kelly, 30, of San Bruno; Janice Virginia Fernandez, said to be in her early 20s, and Phillip Michael Fernandez, 38, who gave no address.

Albert Fernandez was booked for possession of illegal firearms, stolen property, resistricted drugs and a parole violation. Connell, who was booked for possession of a controlled substance and stolen property, also was charged with a parole violation.

Both were booked into the county jail without bail. The others were booked on $3,000 bail for investigation of various charges with the exception of Janice Fernandez, who had an additional $1,000 tacked on for an outstanding warrant.

All were charged with being in a house where narcotics were being sold. Barbara Kelly, James Kunkel, Curlee and Janice Fernandez also face investigation of possession of stolen property.

Blevins said investigation of drug transactions in San Francisco led authorities to obtain a warrant to search the El Cerrito house. He said the narcotics confiscated in the raid were not large in amount but sufficient to indicate possession for sales.
